Held at Cinema Farnese Arthouse, the festival will feature over thirty feature films from South Korea, Japan, China, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia, Vietnam, Thailand, the Philippines, as well as Nepal and Mongolia.

APRIL MARKETS

SHOPPING, VINTAGE

This April in Rome, enjoy a variety of markets throughout the city that offer a diverse range of goods and experiences. Vintage markets are popular, such as the Vintage Market on April 20-21 at San Paolo District. At Città dell'Altra Economia in Testaccio, on April 7 and 21 you'll find the Car Boot Market, a nice market where unused items are displayed from the trunk of the car.

For those interested in the world of handicrafts, on April 14 head to the Eco & Chic Market at Piazza dell'Immacolata in San Lorenzo with handmade, crafts, selected vintage clothing, collectibles, and more. If you're into wellness and eco-sustainability, there are markets that feature environmentally-friendly products and services, such as the Anima Verde Market taking place at Città dell'Altra Economia every Sunday. On April 6-7, the Hippie Market will head to Wunderkammer in Castel Gandolfo. Handmade and Vintage await you with a rich program. On April 20-21, at Ficus Al Massimo you'll find handmade jewels, home décor, fashion, and more. And don't forget to check out the weekly market at Alcazar Live, an artisan and handmade market with music, brunch and DJ set.

UKIYOE – THE FLOATING WORLD OF JAPAN AT PALAZZO BRASCHI

Sarah Black

till 23 June 2024
Museum of Rome at Palazzo Braschi
Tuesday to Sunday 10am – 7pm
€13-15
museodiroma.it

The exhibition Ukiyoe. Il Mondo Fluttuante is now available at the Museum of Rome at Palazzo Braschi until June 23rd. With over one hundred and fifty masterpieces from thirty different artists, this collection is one you cannot miss.

Ukiyoe is a Japanese pictorial genre of art from the seventeenth to nineteenth century Edo era. The word directly translates to “images of the floating world” and depicts a rich chapter of Japanese history. Its influence, however, does not end in Japan as the Ukiyoe style, technique, and significance has made waves around the world.

The most prominent masters of Ukiyoe can be found in the exhibit. Kitagawa Utamaro, Katsushika Hokusai, T. Shusai Sharaku, Keisai

Eisen and the great Utagawa are just a few world-renowned artists whose works now decorate the walls of the Palazzo Braschi. The exhibit includes a variety of mediums such as handheld scrolls, large format screens, brush paintings on silk or paper, and prints in polychrome with a wooden matrix on paper. Equally as fascinating as the techniques employed in Ukiyoe art are the subjects of the art. Every piece tells a part of the story of the new emerging economic class of Edo, which is now Tokyo. Before this time only elites with political influence had money to spend on luxury and cultural refinement. However, with the start of the 1600s a city class began to rise to wealth in Edo. For the first time this a group without political power could invest in items like fashionable clothing and live a materialistic lifestyle. In this exhibit you can see how the artists shift from illustrations of earthly wonders and natural landscapes to a focus on fashion, cityscapes, and other worldly pleasures.

While Ukiyoe art has an emphasis on aesthetics, many of the artists used their work to sneakily convey messages to the public that the government's censorship forbade. The Ukiyoe technique allowed for mass production and mass diffusion of art for the first time in Japanese history. Artists took advantage of this and used their works to bring moral teachings to the public and therefore diminish the Japanese government's hegemonic power. Utagawa Toyoharu and Kitagawa Utamaro are examples of artists who depicted women engaged with activities like painting, calligraphy, poetry and more.

Ukiyoe art not only altered Japanese culture but went on to have a strong impact on European art of the nineteenth and twentieth century. Van Gogh and Monet are just two famous artists that drew inspiration for the Ukiyoe. Furthermore, much of the art from the Edo era was traded with the west, Italy being a primary recipient of Ukiyoe art. In fact, all pieces on display come from the collections of Italian artists and diplomats. This along with the stories of Vincenzo Ragusa and Edoardo Chiossone, two Italian artists who were invited to study at Japan's fine art instructions at the end of the nineteenth century, are telling of the ties Ukiyoe has to Italian culture. From these actions we can see how Japan expressed openness in its relations with people of Italy. Therefore, the exhibition's temporary home in Rome is perfectly fitting. Do not miss your opportunity to explore this era of Japanese history.
